

Children and Healing with the Angels by Nathan Ho

Children have an innate and natural connection to their intuition and their Divine Guidance. They have a level of innocence that brings about a sense of clarity without judgment. This is usually a being more connected to the imagination, which is in fact, the interpreter of messages and signs from the Universe. As a Clairvoyant Healer and Teacher, I have had the privilege and the honour of working with children in fun, dynamic and exciting ways to teach them about what is really a natural and inborn connection to themselves, the world within them and the world all around them.

One of the most prominent ways that I have worked with Children is through facilitating experiential and hands on workshops for them and their parents, all with the intention of developing a better understanding about themselves and the loving and benevolent presence of the Angelic Kingdom in their everyday lives. What I find most empowering about these workshops is the level of shared understanding that develops between a child and their parent/s as a result of the experience.

For instance, a parent may be concerned about what their child is experiencing, be that of what they hear, see, feel or think, and this might not be considered 'normal' amongst their peers. When parents hear about these workshops and they come along to see what these connections are all about, both the children and parents develop a better understanding and awareness of these experiences. Resulting from this, they are able to feel more comfortable about their spiritual gifts; working with them to support their lives, rather than rejecting them and living in fear of themselves and what they can accomplish with Divine Intervention or Spiritual Assistance.

Children love Angels! They can feel the love and the support that they radiate, and in knowing that they call upon their Angels for all sorts of things, I have seen children of all different backgrounds and ability levels shine in whole different way. This brings a warm feeling to my heart, knowing that the blessings that have come about resulting from Angelic connections can be spread and shared to other family members and friends. Reflecting upon this however, it also reminds me that connecting with Angels in everyday life is simple and needn't be complicated.

Whilst in previous generations, to be spiritually open to Angels would have many thinking that some of the following things:

- They would need to be from a certain religious background,
- They would be possibly be seen as out of the ordinary, or
- Having these spiritual and intuitive connections would mean that they would need to be doing healings and readings as their 'profession'.

Working with children and teaching them to develop their awareness and relationships with the Angelic Kingdom, has however, demonstrated something much more profound. Because these connections can be so easily established and maintained, and as we are moving towards a more accepting and open-minded world, we need to also understand that being a healer means much more than healing for the purpose of healing others and seeing clients. Whilst that is one aspect of it, it also builds upon the principles of being a healer in every walk of life. Working with Children and teaching them to connect with their Angels has demonstrated that different people, regardless of their age, background, culture, religion and life experience, all have the ability to connect with and heal with the Angels. In order to be the healer it involves one to do the self-healing and to be able to hold the light in all different expressions and representations of life.

Healing can also involve other things such as,

- Cheering up an upset person,
- Helping out other children and adults in need,
- Being able to listen to others who need to share,
- Forgiving others,
- Loving unconditionally and
- Finding the best in other people, places and situations.

Working with the Angelic Kingdom has taught me that Angels love each of us unconditionally and that there is an Angel inside each and every one of us. Through sharing this message onto the children of today and tomorrow, I intend to remind them of the great light inside of them, just like how a candle lights the wick of other candles. To enlighten, inspire, educate and spread a message of peace, one person at a time.

Blessings and love,
