

Intuitive children

Intuition speaks to us in many different ways which are unique to us. Some of us may experience the sensation of thinking about someone and later on in the day, receive a phone call from them or meet them while we are out shopping. Intuition may be referred to as having a gut feeling, a hunch, or just a sense of knowing. Everyone is naturally intuitive. We were all born with this skill from the moment we entered this physical lifetime.

Children are naturally attuned to using their intuition. As an intuitive development teacher, I nurture this ability in children by teaching them to talk to their angels and guides, scan for etheric cords causing energy imbalances and how to give intuitive readings with and without the use of reading tools.

Children come into this world choosing their parents but that doesn't mean they have to grow up being taught in the same ways as their parents. This is because consciousness is evolving, society is changing, and a warmly welcomed return of paradigm thinking is among us all. More parents are becoming increasingly aware of their child's intuitive experiences, which may be seen as:

- expressing a display of certain feelings or moods towards particular people and places—a child may be unsettled by the energy of another person or place
- speaking to imaginary friends
- speaking of upcoming events
- speaking to relatives they've never met—a child may be talking to deceased loved ones, their guides or angels who are telling them information they could not have possibly learned from anyone else.

Some parents may not know how to nurture their children or may choose not to because of fear of rejection and ridicule from other families, schools, social groups, and religious groups. However, it has become more noticeable in the family and school environments I have worked, the common link with all these incidents are too frequent to be called a coincidence or a stage of development which can be ignored.

I have discovered by working with children and parents, age and background are no limitation to what has always been a part of us in truth. Intuition is an inborn skill some may or may not nurture, and it is experienced in a variety of ways. This could be likened to your creativity—natural, inborn and a different experience for everyone who chooses to nurture it.

When children are born, they come through from the realm of Spirit and incarnate into a physical body. Children bring into their physical incarnation the qualities of innocence and purity, which makes a child so receptive to their intuition. The main difference between children and adults is children have not yet had the conditioning of the physical reality to limit what they experience, by analysing, judging, or labelling something through the logical facets of the thinking mind.

Children do not worry about being judged for what they say or do, and this is what makes them so naturally gifted and inspiring. Children come from a place of integrity and they speak up and speak their honest truths. They let those around them know what their needs are and let others know what they are experiencing.

Children remind us there is much more to the world than the physical, as they look beyond the surface without limits.

There is a child-like nature within everyone, and it does not matter how much you age physically, you'll always be a child of the Light. It is through this connection with your child-like nature, you are able to experience your intuition and remember what it feels like to see the world through a set of different eyes. Through the innocence displayed by the children I've taught, I've witnessed some breakthrough family bonding and intuitive developments in their parents. This is because the adults have been so inspired watching what their child can do, they have also been empowered with an understanding of what their children are experiencing. This creates a strengthened bond between parent and child as there is common ground for them to walk on together.

Teaching children reminds us to keep it simple! The most nourishing and nurturing thing an adult, parent, or teacher can do for a child, is to just accept them for who they are. This is based on adults treating children as individuals, without trying to categorise them or make them conform to what is perceived as normal. Although the generations before them are here to guide and support children in the physical world, children are here to teach the world balance, harmony, love and peace through their graceful presence. Through nurturing intuition in children, it empowers them to stay true to themselves, and it also reminds us who we really are—a spiritual being experiencing a physical life.

By Nathan Star
Clairvoyant, Healer and Teacher of Intuitive Development
www.nathanstar.com

